I think the human experience is one of odds and flaws. And ever among so merrily. It wasn't bad, by any stretch of the word, but it wasn't long enough to allow any strong feelings of attachment to form. Even harpoons were different, some were more like firearms and were gas-powered or used gunpowder-you no longer had to throw them; the ships were different, too, with added sails. We make every effort to ensure the accuracy of the information and prices published in our catalogs, however we reserve the right to correct errors and adjust prices to account for these possible inaccuracies.
